Bushy-tailed Woodrats

Bushy-tailed woodrats (Neotoma cinerea) are native to Montana occurring throughout the state except for the extreme northeastern corner. Their grayish or ashen colored fur with white feet and, of course a fully-furred tail easily distinguish them from the invasive Norway rat (Rattus norvegicus).

Normally, woodrats are not a concern. However, when they invade structures, the damage they cause can be substantial. In times past, Pest Management Professionals (PMPs) had to rely on exclusion and trapping to manage the species because no rodenticide was registered for the control of bushy-tailed woodrats. Thankfully, PMPs have another tool in their toolbox for the control of bushy-tailed woodrats causing damage around structures.

Following a request by the MDA's Vertebrate Pest Specialist, the EPA allowed rodenticide manufacturers to add bushy-tailed woodrats to their structural-based labels without requiring manufacturers to perform efficacy studies. This concession by the EPA was significant as it eliminated research costs which would have made adding packrats to labels cost prohibitive.

Montana rodenticide labels that have bushy-tailed woodrats listed include:

- Renegade Mini Blocks (EPA Reg. 7173-288)
- FastDraw40 Soft Bait (EPA Reg. 7173-258)
- Revolver40 Soft Bait (EPA Reg. 7173-297).

All three products are general use, second generation anticoagulant rodenticides and must be used within 100 ft of a permanent agricultural structure.

Keep reading your labels. We anticipate more structural rodenticide labels to include bushy-tailed woodrats in the coming months.
